

MURPHY IS A FIGHTER AND HAS THE PUNCH

Harlemite Who Meets McGovern in Philadelphia To-Night Has Trained Hard with the Idea of Putting Terry Away.

BY ROBERT EDGREN.

ARLEM TOMMY MURPHY, who meets Terry McGovern to-night in the National A. C., of Philadelphia, is a fighter. No matter what other comment spectators have made on Murphy's showing against the Attells and other butterfly boxers, they have always given the Harlem youngster his share of credit for willingness and slugging ability.

Murphy started as a slugger. He grew up in Greenpoint, where he used to punch all of the other Greenpoint youngsters of his own size, therely attaining to a certain eminence. Finding none other in his class on that particular part of Long Island, Murphy came across the river to raid the New Polo A. C. He didn't hesitate after making up his mind to become famous, but upon landing in New York at once started for Harlem. He didn't have a car fare, so he had to walk. That is, he would have walked, but it was time for the bouts to go on, and

Arriving at the New Polo somewhat winded he sought out Johnny Oliver and asked for a fight. Oliver looked him over and told him to come again next week, when he had recovered his wind. But Tommy insisted and begged so hard that Mr. Oliver at last gave in and put him on with a husky youngster who had been trimming the bunch. Tommy landed a knockout with the first punch

That looked like a fluke, of course, so Oliver put him on again for luck. He knocked out the next one, too. Then, on later boxing nights, he stowed away several others, until Mr. Oliver, who ne managerial instinct well developed, took him in hand, put to regular training, and began booming Tommy as a championship

But Tommy kept plugging all through the fight, outclassed as he was, and aftercareful coaching of clever Frank Erne He thinks now that he could get away with Abe in spite of his cleverness.

Murphy fought a lot of good boys af-ter Attell and learned more and more about the game. Somehow he seemed to lose the terrible knockout punch with which he started in the game, or else it wasn't hard enough for the tough lads he tried it on. He whipped Chick Tucker. He trimmed several others.

The most important of his later fights was with Hughle McGovern, brother of Was with Hughle according to the didn't knock Hughle out, but gave him a fearful beating. Hughle was a comer until then, but has not been heard of since then, but has not been heard of since fighting Murphy. The register of the co-casion, and it is said that his brother's defeat so rankled in his mind that he still carries a determination to take it out of Murphy. In that case, with the grudge added, the fight ought to be a furious one.

TOMMY MURPHY has been training long and hard for this, the fight of his career. If he can only knock out McGovern he will be right in line for championships and everything else. He has been coached carefully by Erne and has improved greatly. He is strong, game and aggressive. He fights with a crouch, When hard pressed he crosses his arms before his face and stalls. It isn't pret. but it is at these times that Murphy is most dangerous. He has habit of coming suddenly out of these crouches, with a savage swing that usually lands on the target. Although hasn't knecked out any of his rivals ely with this blow it looks hard bugh to bring home the money to riem if it bumps against the point any one's chin.

He looks good, and a goes fast in training. He has his neh, and it is a hard enough punch curl most of the little fellows up the a shaving if it lands. George Bates, of Allen, McGraw & Co., of No. 24 Broad street, took the bet. It was the only real bet of any consequence made.

There is very little betting being done in the financial district, as the McClellan money can't find takers. The only betting offered in the Hearst canvass is that he will not get 100,000, and very few bets have been made on this proposition. No one seems to want to bet on Ivins on any condition.

It is predicted that there will be some lively betting on the New York county ticket as soon as the Jerome campaign gets under way.
